Like conventional image files, all files of ImageFileLib can be renamed along with a description. This function can be useful to users who want to know the contents of their files. Image Upload to Web Pages: ImageFileLib is capable of uploading files that contain images of any kind (JPEG, GIF, TGA, BMP, PNG, etc.) to a web page. Users can have even more control over the complete process, ranging from the file name, through the files information or its source, to the size. Image processing: ImageFileLib has a wide range of functions for image processing, such as resizing, watermarking, filtering, encoding, and many more. You just need to specify the desired effects, and the engine will let you know if the process is successful. The program is compatible with any external libraries. Easy Image Conversion: With the inclusion of a new "image converter" that converts between a wide variety of image formats, ImageFileLib has a powerful feature to convert files. New versions also provide the possibility to convert to JPEG, GIF or PNG. The user has all the information about the original file and all the new files created. All this is possible by simply downloading ImageFileLib and registering its components in the Delphi IDE. Notes: The version is currently in the pre-beta stage. A few noticeable errors have been detected during its testing stage, and the program is still in need of optimizing. However, we have some confidence in the final results and if everything goes as planned, we are sure it will be the perfect image library for Delphi programmers to use.
