Who needs to sync files between computers? A lot of us do, for various reasons. To keep a safe copy of important files, but also to play them. To fill an iPod or other media player with playlists of favorite files, but also to install software without having to reinstall each time or send CDs around. What if you want to get rid of all that? You still need to write a check for a USB hard drive, for example. Or you can use something free, like OpenSync. OpenSync is one of the best online backup and sync utilities you can get. Why? Not only can you backup files and folders or your entire PC to the cloud, but you can also share files or directories between your PC and another computer or mobile device. It's also super easy to configure and add to your network. Once it's setup, you can instantly copy and share files from the cloud onto a computer or mobile device. You can even use OpenSync to sync contacts, pictures and other information between all of your devices. Before you jump ahead, take a look at the 30-day trial period. You'll get all the files, folders and other data backed up and synced to the cloud. You can also check out the trial here. Free files sync your entire computer and USB drives to the cloud. Some servers are headquartered outside of the United States while its users mostly speak English. Video games, websites, and the general Internet ecosystem all rely on the ability to understand requests and make assumptions that these are being made by a regular human being. Even though you're in North America, or more precisely in its largest city of Toronto, this doesn't mean you can't get an accurate representation of the location you're at. Using the software Deep Speech 2, built by Google Research, you can detect the language of your surrounding text and convert it to text on a specific country. The actual language detection is handled by a neural network, an AI system inspired by the human brain. To use it you only need to point it to a video feed (YouTube, Twitch, Vimeo, etc.), which results in an output of your chosen language. From the YouTube of the creators of YouTube (me) we provide the most accurate, full feature 'tutorial' for the game of Fortnite (including answers to often asked questions).
